Summer: A time to enjoy family, friends, practice good risk management

KIRTLAND AIR FORCE BASE, N.M. –

While June 21 is the official beginning of summer, Memorial Day weekend acts as the unofficial kickoff to the summer season for many Air Force families. The weather is in that sweet spot between not too hot, and not too cold. Many families are enjoying an extended weekend together. Friends gather to barbeque and take time to honor those who died while serving the United States. Simply put, it is a great jump-start for the season to come.

As Airmen approach and plan for summer activities, leadership at all levels should take the time to discuss risk management and highlight hazards Airmen may encounter during the upcoming months. The Air Force's top three leaders began that conversation in a tri-signature memo recently sent to all Airmen.

"As you execute our Air Force mission or participate in summer activities with your family and friends, please use what you have learned about risk management," the memo read. "Plan for the unexpected, make wise choices, and avoid unnecessary risks."

The memo also emphasized how personal safety directly ties to Air Force readiness. Over the past decade, preventable accidents on and off duty have tragically claimed 16 Airmen lives on average per year during the summer months.

Summer is a time that every Airmen should rejoice. The beautiful weather is cause to explore the corners of not only the United States, but also countries across the globe, as Airmen are engaging in worldwide operations. With those adventures come risks. Airmen are encouraged to have a plan, understand their local hazards, and practice good risk management.

"A loss of life to a preventable accident impacts not only the Airmen and their families, but the entire Air Force and how we get the mission done," said Maj. Gen. John T. Rauch, Air Force Chief of Safety. "That's why it's so important for Airmen and leaders to understand risk management isn't something that you simply focus on part time. It is a method of understanding what your hazards are, mitigating those risks where possible, and accepting risk at the appropriate levels, both on and off duty."

Rising temperatures lead to more time spent outdoors, traveling to enjoy family vacations, and increased chances of dehydration, exposing Airmen to more risk during the summer months. While Airmen commonly acknowledge these risks, they do not always register risks in the moment.

"Many of us tend to want to turn our brains off and relax when summer hits, however the opposite needs to happen," said Bill Parsons, Air Force Safety Center's Occupation Safety division chief. "Don't let your guard down in the summer."

Parsons continued that one hazard in particular stands out as often overlooked.

"Every year we lose Airmen to water-related activities and many times it's simply due to lack of preparation," Parsons said. "Airmen must intimately understand the hazards presented by water, whether it is temperature, depth, currents, or adding alcohol and sleep deprivation into the mix."

Alcohol is another major hazard that often impairs good risk management. Over the last five years, 66 Airmen deaths occurred throughout the summer. At least 22 of those deaths involved alcohol.

"It's not that Airmen don't know that alcohol impairs their decision making ability because I'm confident the Air Force takes every opportunity to emphasize and re-emphasize that message," said Rauch. "What's missing is a well thought out plan before engaging in their chosen activities. Excessive alcohol, poor judgement, and summer activities with the lack of a plan simply don't mix."

Summer is a time that every Airmen should rejoice. The beautiful weather is cause to explore the corners of not only the United States, but also countries across the globe, as Airmen are engaging in worldwide operations. With those adventures come risks. Airmen are encouraged to have a plan, understand their local hazards, and practice good risk management.

Airman credits PPE for saving life in motorcycle crash

By Staff Sgt. Dana J. Cable

19th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

A lot of people have said the phrase, 'I feel like I got hit by a truck' in a figurative sense, but when U.S. Air Force Tech. Sgt. Gabriel Diaz, 19th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron flight line expeditor, says it, he says it from experience.

Monday, May 6 started as a normal day off for Diaz.

"I didn't have work that day because I had just had weekend duty, and my boss gave me the day off," Diaz said. "It was just a typical day. I woke up, did some yard work, kissed the wife goodbye, and then hopped on my bike."

Diaz was on his Honda VFR800 Interceptor heading north on Highway 5 when he got into the left-hand turning lane on a green light. Since there was on-coming traffic, Diaz waited to turn left.

"The lane there splits into two, so there is a straightaway lane and a left turn lane," Diaz said. "The guy that hit me was following behind a van too closely, and when the van moved over into the straight away lane he didn't see me there waiting to turn left and thought he was still in a straight-away lane."

Diaz was then hit from behind by a truck traveling around 40-45 mph.

"He didn't react at all and didn't see me sitting there," Diaz said. "It happened so fast, and I didn't even know he was coming. I didn't hear squealing of brakes, no horn, he just drove right through me."

Diaz recalls, it sounded like a shotgun going off in his helmet and remembers seeing his feet up in the blue sky before landing on top of his motorcycle, which was laying down sideways in the middle of the road.

"I had to run and get myself and my bike out of the middle of the road, and when I pushed my kickstand back down with my foot I knew it was broken," Diaz said.

While luck played a part of his survival, Diaz credits his personal protective equipment for saving his life.

"My helmet did its job," Diaz said. "You can see on the glove where I came down on my hand trying to stop myself from falling and then on my boot where it broke both the passenger and driver foot pegs clean off the bike."

Diaz walked away with two broken bones in his foot and a bruised pelvis.

"In the Air Force, we are required to wear full protective gear when riding," Diaz said. "In Arkansas, you can see guys riding around in shorts and flip flops. If I would have been riding like that, I would have lost my foot."

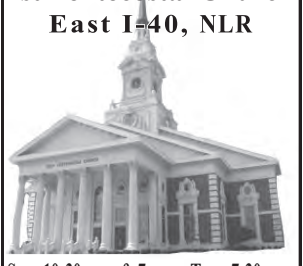

Protection against the hazards of riding a motorcycle begins with good safety practices, riding techniques and PPE.

"Without the proper PPE, there is nothing between the rider and the roadway," said Deane Duerkop, 19th Airlift Wing occupational safety manager. "Ensuring your PPE is fitted properly, and hasn't expired is also critical if wanting to survive a crash. The next time you gear up, consider the possibility of flying 30 feet in the air, then impacting the roadway or another vehicle."

Diaz is a big proponent of the mandatory Air Force motorcycle safety classes and mentorship rides.

"Taking mandatory motorcycle rider safety courses is another defense in preparing yourself to combat the hazards you'll encounter on roadways," Duerkop said. "The initial course is the Basic Riders Course, and it will prepare the Airman that has never ridden a motorcycle to safely operate and navigate all potential roadway hazards."

"I have always been prepared on how to quickly stop my bike, swerve out of the way or throttle out of something, and the motorcycle safety classes teach those skills," Diaz said. "That's one reason I went to multiple riders classes, because that knowledge you get from experienced riders is in invaluable."

Any seasoned rider will tell you it's not a matter of if you will go down, it's a matter of when, according to Diaz. So it's important that riders protect themselves with good boots that at least cover the ankle, gloves, a good Kevlar jacket, and a Department of Transportation-approved helmet.

The responsibility for road awareness doesn't fall solely into the hands of the motorcyclist; automobile drivers also need to pay attention and be watchful. In this case Diaz did everything right, and there was nothing he could have done to prevent the accident.

So far this fiscal year the U.S. Air Force has had three motorcycle fatalities.

"If a motorcycle rider is involved in an accident, ensure you comply with all federal or state laws as applicable and seek medical attention, if required," Duerkop said.

Within 24 hours of an accident, notify your supervisor that you were involved in an accident. The supervisor will complete an AF Form 978, Supervisor's Mishap Report, then route it to your unit safety representative and commander. Depending on the severity of the accident, an appropriate-level safety investigation will be completed by the 19 AW Occupational Safety Office. As a reminder, the safety office personnel are there to serve Team Little Rock and can be reached at 501-987-3290.

LRAFB firefighters always ready

BY STAFF SGT. STEPHANIE SERRANO, 19TH AIRLIFT WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

It's 3:25 a.m. and the emergency alarm sounds bringing the 19th Civil Engineer Squadron Fire Department to life.

The men and women of the 19th CES Fire Department rush out of their living quarters, donning 50 to 70 pounds of equipment as they hop in their firetrucks and leave the station to respond to possible life-threatening situations.

"We do everything we can to make sure that when people have their worst days, we are there to help them out," said U.S. Air Force Senior Airman Christopher Gold, 19th CES fire protection journeyman.

The Little Rock Air Force Base Firefighters work 48-hour shifts - eating, sleeping and training at the fire station. Firefighters perform specialized training tailored to improving emergency response skills by incorporating the use of fire equipment into workouts.

Along with responding to emergency calls, training for real-world and wartime missions, and ensuring vehicles and equipment are fully operational they provide the local community with education services.

“We have multiple community partnerships, not only in the response aspect, but also in fire prevention and fire education,” said U.S. Air Force Senior Master Sgt. Christian Lyle, 19th CES assistant chief of operations. “We feel that if we can teach and help to prevent fires, we can help save people from having a bad day.”

On average, the fire department team receives about a 1,000 calls per year ranging from aircraft emergencies and auto accidents to hazardous material emergencies. Since firefighters regularly work together, often in dangerous conditions, a good working relationship is vital.

“We have to communicate effectively when we are out on emergencies. Each person on the team needs to know that we have each other’s back,” Gold said. “Being part of the fire department is being part of a family.”

By the end of the day, the Airmen are able to have some downtime to relax and families are welcome to stop by the station to share a meal, keeping in mind they might have to respond to an emergency at a moment’s notice.

“We live by the motto: if we’re not actively fighting fires, we’re training to fight the fire,” Lyle said. “If we’re not actively supporting the war mission, we’re training to support the war mission.”
