SIGNIFICANT ACTION

Tech. Sgt. Andrew Strazzinski is an important team member who processed all awards for the 19th Operations Group from June 2014 to July 2015. His hard work yielded three Air Mobility Command-level awards for the group. Strazzinski was also involved in standardizing criteria and editing products for seven squadrons. Recently, Strazzinski had a permanent change of assignment and is now a C-130J loadmaster instructor at the 41st Airlift Squadron.

promotion celebration,
4 p.m. Thursday at Hangar 1080

Congratulations Master Sgt. selects

LITTLE ROCK AIR FORCE BASE, Ark. — Sixty-nine Team Little Rock technical sergeants were selected for promotion to master sergeant Thursday. Overall, the Air Force selected 5,301 technical sergeants, 22.4 percent of the 23,619 eligible, for promotion to master sergeant during the 2015 E7 promotion cycle.

This is the first master sergeant promotion cycle to incorporate a two-phase selection process. The two-phase process included a Phase I score based on Weighted Airman Promotion System factors (enlisted performance reports, time in grade, time in service, decorations points, promotion fitness examination and skills knowledge test scores). Eligible Airmen whose Phase I scores met the Phase I cutoff for their control Air Force specialty code are considered for promotion during the Phase II central evaluation board.

Airmen selected for master sergeant will be promoted in order of promotion sequence number beginning Aug. 1. Selections are tentative until the data verification process is complete, which is normally within 10 days of the promotion release date.

Congratulation to the selectees:

MISSION SPOTLIGHT

SENIOR AIRMAN ANGELA BARBOUR

19th Maintenance Squadron Munitions Flight document control/custody account manager

Why is your job important?

We supply every C-130 on base with chaff and flare. We help multiple units across base with munitions, ranging from security forces, to explosive ordnance disposal.

What is your favorite part about your job?

I'm by the book. I like that everything we do is outlined with technical orders and Air Force instructions.

What is your most memorable experience working here?

I'll never forget going to another unit on base and completing an entire munitions inventory by myself.

What is your most significant accomplishment here?

I'm proud to be respected for my knowledge of the career field, regardless of my rank.

SCORECARD: 314TH AIRLIFT WING

The 314th Airlift Wing is the nation's C-130 "Center of Excellence." The wing is responsible for training C-130 aircrew members from across the Department of Defense, to include the Coast Guard and 46 allied nations. Some of the ways the 314th AW tracks its successes are through measured aircraft availability and mission-capable rates. Those metrics as of Tuesday are:

Mission capable rate

C-130J: (standard 80%): 81.5%

Aircraft availability

C-130J: (standard 8.4): 9.9

C-130 SCHOOL GRADUATES

Number of combat aircrew members sent to the fight

beginning Oct. 1, 2014:

Deployed maintainer keeps Hercs flying

BAGRAM AIR FIELD, Afghanistan – Staff Sgt. Danielle Garcia, 455th Expeditionary Aircraft Maintenance Squadron instruments and flight controls systems technician, helps manage the control systems for the C-130J Super Hercules aircraft, allowing pilots to complete their mission here. She is deployed from the 19th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron.

Garcia performs repairs for the navigational system that pilots use to fly. She also performs electrical work on the guidance and control system, altitude control and the primary flight controls.

“Without my team here, the C-130s would have trouble getting off the ground. It doesn’t take a lot for our systems to go down, and we need to be there to perform those quick repairs and get the plane back in flying status,” Garcia said. “The job is pretty challenging. Sometimes it takes time and thinking outside the box to figure out what’s going on with the systems. It’s not always simple, and I love the challenge it brings.”

Garcia is part of the “1000s of Hands” of 455 AEW Airmen who are crucial to the wing’s mission to generate and sustain airpower on the combat frontier of NATO’s Resolute Support mission in Afghanistan and Operation Freedom’s Sentinel. The “1000s of Hands” project

AF revolutionizes study material delivery for FY16

Secretary of the Air Force Public Affairs

WASHINGTON (AFNS)—Airmen studying for career development and promotion opportunities will begin to receive study materials solely online by Oct. 1, 2017.

Electronic delivery of Career Development Course volumes and Weighted Airman Promotion System study references have been in place for several years with a majority of the materials accessible on Air Education and Training Command websites.

“Air Education and Training Command’s e-WORLD websites provide Airmen the opportunity to download study materials for use globally with the click of a mouse,” said Chief Master Sgt.

Scott Lumpkin, the Chief of Air Force Enlisted Force Development. “The electronic format also gives courseware developers the ability to add interactive content, making learning material more interesting, with the goal of increasing student comprehension.”

The Electronic WAPS Online Reference Library Database (e-WORLD) is currently available to .mil users only at <http://cdc.aetc.af.mil>. Once downloaded to their military desktop, Airmen can e-mail the WAPS materials or burn them to a CD in order to transfer them to a personal electronic device. The complete Enlisted Promotions References and Requirements Catalog is also available online at <https://www.omsq.af.mil/TE/EPRRC.pdf>, along with the Professional Development Guide at <http://pdg.af.mil>.

A phased approach will be used to ensure every Air Force Specialty Code is prepared for electronic delivery of its study material. The three phased approach focuses on the target of complete electronic delivery of unclassified CDCs by Oct. 1, 2017. The process for electronic delivery of classified CDCs will remain unchanged. Career Field Managers for those AFSCs transitioning over the next several months will execute specific plans as the printing and shipping processes are phased out.

Since February 2012, the primary WAPS study material - the PDG - has been available online in a variety of electronic formats through the Advanced Distributed Learning Service and AETC Airman Advancement Division websites. The Airman Advancement Division will no longer print or distribute the PDG beyond fiscal year 2015.

In fall 2015, the PDG will be published electronically as Air Force Handbook 1, Airman. The handbook will support the enlisted promotion system with the publication of individual study guides from each enlisted promotion testing grades (staff sergeant to chief master sergeant). These study guides will be available along with other tools to support all mobile devices this fall.

“The transition to electronic study materials is a step forward we need to take to ensure a fiscally-responsible approach,” said Chief Master Sgt. of the Air Force James A. Cody. “The online libraries and easy-to-use formats will give Airmen the flexibility they need to study when and where they want to, while still delivering the education and information they need to succeed in their Air Force careers.”

For the birds

By Tammy L. Reed

19th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

Little Rock Air Force Base pilots invest a lot of time in flight training assessing and mitigating risks they will face delivering beans and bullets to warfighters downrange.

One of the biggest risks aircrews face, no matter where they are flying, are the risks of bird strikes. Bird strikes are just that: A bird, or birds, striking a plane in flight causing damage to the engines, windshields and other parts of the plane; they are a major risk and can be costly in aircraft damage and human lives.

It's a serious safety issue for Air Force pilots in general and Little Rock AFB in particular. The base's very location puts it right on the convergence of the Central Flyway and the Mississippi Flyway; two major corridors birds use to migrate twice a year in the spring and fall.

Limiting exposure to bird strikes is a full-time job for base safety and airfield personnel.

"We have a lot of birds that come right over central Arkansas, right when and where we're flying all the time, and that's why we've led the Air Force in bird strikes," said Kimm Hunt, USDA wildlife biologist.

It's also one of the reasons why Hunt works with Team Little Rock in the 19th Air Wing Safety office. He runs the Bird/wildlife Aircraft Strike Hazard, or BASH program, and his work helps reduce the number of bird strikes affecting Little Rock's pilots.

"When I first got here (eight years ago), the bird strike rate was about 17 bird strikes per thousand hours of flying, now we're down to less than 10," Hunt said. "We'll never get rid of bird strikes ... but we can try to reduce their number as much as possible, and keep it at a manageable level. Our goal is to keep it under 10."

One of the tools the base uses to reach that goal is one Hunt developed himself, called the Bird Strike Threat calculator, or BST.

Mission planners use the calculator to answer five questions: date, time, altitude they are flying, weather pattern and route they are flying. All questions directly related to a pilot's chance of running into birds. Their answers give them the bird strike threat level for that plan.

"The threat levels are from one to five, with one being low. What this allows them to do is if they come up with a four or five, they can change one or more of those five parameters to reduce that number down to a one or two," Hunt said. "They can look ahead and determine how much of a threat they're going to have on that mission and mitigate from there."

Capt. Cerre Dolby, 61st Airlift Squadron, shows a pilot new to Little Rock Air Force Base how to use the Bird Strike Threat Calculator when on missions. This is a tool USDA Wildlife Biologist Kimm Hunt developed for the base to help reduce bird strikes for its pilots.

They use the BST in addition to the Avian Hazard Advisory System and Bird Avoidance Model tools used Air Force wide, further reducing the chance of bird strikes.

Base leadership made that addition here, as it has been proven to be effective for the local BASH program.

BASH isn't just for the birds, as deer and other animals often run across airfields to collide with the planes moving there, causing as much damage as avian collisions.

Hunt has a number of tools on the ground he uses to make the airfield safer both for the pilots and their planes and those animals.

One is the 5 miles of electric fence that surrounds it. Hunt is in charge of maintaining the fence and keeping animals on the other side of it. There's a lot of animal psychology used in training the deer to maintain a healthy fear of that fence.

He explained that deer's hair is hollow, and they are fairly well insulated, so they don't feel the non-lethal shock from the fence unless they touch it with their nose or mouth. They get to where they will go in and out of the fence, or run right through it. He has to retrain them to stay away.

"Maybe four times a year, I'll go along the hot wire about every few one hundred yards, and put some peanut butter on there...They can't resist licking the peanut butter. Obviously they get shocked, and it reteaches them to not go through the fence."

He has to watch his results though, as he wants them scared of the fence, and not of peanut butter.

Other methods he uses to keep animals away involve shooting pyrotechnics into the air, firing air cannons and just running at them or harassing them.

Another is as simple as the height of the grass bordering the airfield itself. He explained years of experience and research has shown that keeping grass around the airfield mowed between 7 inches and 14 inches is the ideal vegetation height to reduce large numbers of wildlife.

Boiled down you get this: Above 7 inches, flocking birds won't use the area because they can't see each other and predators. If grass gets higher than 14 inches it goes to seed, providing a food source to the field and a place to hide for a number of creatures who are then food sources to raptors and coyotes.

"If we are going to err, I tell the airfield personnel and the mowers to err on the high side, as there are way too many bird species that like the low grass," Hunt said.

Airfield Manager Kerry Miller said he and his crew work hand-in-hand with Mr. Hunt on BASH. "We discuss the grass heights and the Senior Airman Jordy Lamb, 19th Operations Support Squadron Airfield Management, demonstrates that airfield grass should be kept between 7 to 14 inches as part of the BASH Plan to keep birds and wildlife from the airfield.

management proposals as well as the BASH plan for how we handle the birds on the airfield, so it's a joint environment."

When it comes to harassment and dispersal of wildlife from the airfield, Hunt gets help from Miller's front counter personnel.

"I train them to use techniques such as the pyrotechnics and the air cannons. They take care of it when I'm not around."

Unfortunately the dispersal techniques don't always scare the birds and other animals away, and the wildlife biologist has to resort to more lethal methods.

"On occasion depredation is a necessary evil though, because after a while they get used to the dispersal techniques. They run off for a while, then they come back."

He said you have to retrain the animals to be afraid of the noise, so they don't come back to your airfield. "They need to see that some of them don't make it, and that there are consequences to staying.

"Depredation is always the last resort, the last thing we want to do," he said, "But it is a necessary step."

Pointing out a deer stand right outside the fence, he added that LRAFB allows and encourages hunting to help manage the animal population. He uses hunting as another tool to help with BASH, as hunters help keep animal numbers down and they use the animal as well.

USDA Wildlife Biologist Kimm Hunt, 19th Airlift Wing Safety, fires a Banger pyrotechnic used to disperse birds and wildlife that are on the airfield or too close to it.

If Hunt does have to put an animal down such as a deer or goose, he will donate the meat to the "Hunters feeding the Hungry Program" to utilize them, too.

One of the more personal tools Hunt uses in his work to keep pilots and aircraft safe, is talking directly to the pilots in aircrew awareness. He teaches pilots what to look for and what to avoid when they are flying.

"For example, if they see a bird ahead of them the pilot needs to pull up because the bird will normally dive. It's little techniques like that," he said.

The techniques Hunt imparts and all the tools he uses for the BASH program has made a difference to LRAFB. Miller considers all of this integral to keeping the airfield safe.

"We don't have that many strikes actually on the airfield, and he's a very big reason that we don't."

LRAFB HISTORY FAST FACT

83 DAYS TO GO UNTIL LRAFB TURNS 60!

Why are 19th Airlift Wing members known as Black Knights? The Black Knight mascot originated in 1961 when the 4137th Strategic Wing, then stationed at Robins Air Force Base, Ga., won the Best Overall Wing Award during Strategic Air Command's Combat Competition at Fairchild Air Force Base, Wash. Along with increased rank and pay, the team received an unusual trophy – a 6-foot-tall papier-mâché knight, donated by the Spokane Chamber of Commerce. From that time forward, the wing began calling itself the Black Knights. The Black Knight mascot passed on to the 465th Bombardment Wing in 1963 upon the inactivation of the 4137th SW, before being adopted by the 19th Bombardment Wing five years later. With the 19th BWs activation at Robins AFB on July 25, 1968, the Black Knight mascot again exchanged hands. The 19 BW moved, without personnel and resources, from Homestead Air Force Base, Fla., to assume the inactivating 465th BWs B-52 mission. The former members of the 465th BW, now assigned to the 19th BW, brought with them the Black Knight mascot and the “Checkmate to Aggression” motto. In January 2009, the 19th AW dropped the Checkmate to Aggression slogan, and officially returned to its original motto, “In Alis Vicimus” – “On Wings We Conquer.”

Chaplain's Thought

"People who soar are those who refuse to sit back, sigh and wish things would change. They neither complain of their lot nor passively dream of some distant ship coming in. Rather, they visualize in their minds that they are not quitters, they will not allow life's circumstances to push them down and hold them under."
