CSAF letter to airmen

By Gen. David L. Goldfein
U.S. Air Force Chief of Staff

Fellow Airmen, I am honored and humbled to serve as your 21st Chief of Staff. General and Mrs. Welsh led our Air Force with unwavering commitment through challenging times, preparing Airmen to boldly chart a course into the future. Dawn and I are excited to build upon their success over the next four years.

Our strength lies in you. Your extraordinary professionalism, commitment, and talent are an inspiration to me and to the Nation we serve. America relies on us to assure our allies and partners, deter would-be aggressors, defend our homeland, and defeat our adversaries. From silo to surface, from sky to space – we deliver excellence as we fly, fight, and win.

We succeed or fail as a team. Our unfaltering excellence in air, space, and cyber is the oxygen the joint force breathes ... and the future demands we tackle problems together. As a team of Airmen – Active, Guard, Reserve, and Civilian – we'll engage in an ongoing dialogue about joint warfighting excellence and our role in combined arms, and I will count on your ideas to shape our future force.

Airmen have been breaking barriers since 1947. Thank you for honoring their legacy with your selfless and dedicated service to our Nation, ensuring we remain the world's greatest Air Force.

MSG CORNER

CONSTRUCTION

■ Construction of new sidewalks continues in the community support area of the base.

■ Phase 2 of the Vandenberg Boulevard road construction project continues and traffic patterns will soon change due to the closure of The Thomas Avenue and Vandenberg intersection. See Page 9 for updated traffic information.

■ Fire hydrants between Arkansas Drive and Texas Boulevard in base housing are currently undergoing preventive maintenance. Iron deposits in the mains may cause water to be temporarily discolored. If you see brown water in your faucet, please allow water to run until clear.

■ Construction along Arnold Drive begins soon between CMSgt. Williams Drive and Sixth Street to replace an 8-inch water main. Drivers and pedestrians should use caution and stay alert for construction traffic in this area.

“I consider my dad to be a mentor. I liked the dedication he put into something. If he really wanted something, he wouldn’t stop until he got it. I get my dedication from my dad, it’s a trait I’m proud to have. I put dedication in my work, if I didn’t focus on my job, or miss something, since I deal with electric, and I didn’t do my job correctly, it could cost some lives.”

HISTORY FACT

In July 2003, base leaders dedicated the base lake in honor of Kenneth (Pat) Wilson, one of Little Rock Air Force Base’s “founding fathers.” In 1957, while construction workers removed soil from the area for use during construction of family housing, laborers uncovered a spring. When workers removed the soil, they created a depression that water from the spring filled. Wilson suggested the area be developed as a base lake and recreation area. However, policy at that time required Air Force personnel to return the land to its original condition. Undeterred, he pursued his vision and was ultimately successful. If not for Wilson, the base lake may not exist. He was vital to the base’s founding, and his devotion was instrumental to the creation and preservation of the base.

Goldfein swears in as 21st CSAF

By Staff Sgt. Alyssa C. Gibson
Secretary of the Air Force Public Affairs
Command Information

WASHINGTON (AFNS) — Gen. David L. Goldfein was sworn in as the Air Force’s 21st chief of staff by Air Force Secretary Deborah Lee James during a ceremony at the Pentagon on July 1.

As the Air Force’s most senior uniformed leader, Goldfein is responsible for ensuring the 660,000 active-duty, Guard, Reserve and civilian Airmen under his command are fully trained and equipped. He also joins the Joint Chiefs of Staff as an adviser to the secretary of defense, National Security Council and the president of the United States.

“The Air Force is going to be relying on your determination, General Goldfein, to improve readiness, to improve our modernization, and most importantly – always at the top of the list

– taking care of our Airmen,” James said. “It is a huge responsibility, it’s also an honor, and it’s also a great privilege, and I have every confidence that you are going to take our Air Force to new heights.”

One of Goldfein’s first acts as chief of staff was to make a pledge to his Airmen.

“(This is) my commitment to you – to work every day to give you everything I’ve got, to leave nothing on the table, to remain laser-focused on warfighting excellence, to find the opportunity in every challenge, to treat team building as a contact sport, and to be worthy of this honor,” he said. “And I can’t wait to get started. Fight’s on!”

In his previous position as the Air Force’s vice chief of staff, Goldfein presided over the Air Staff, and served as a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Requirements Oversight Council and Deputy Advisory Working Group.

C-130 Weapons Instructor Course celebrates 20 years

By Senior Airman Stephanie Serrano
19th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

The C-130 Weapons Instructor Course celebrated its 20-year anniversary June 24, 2016, at Nellis Air Force Base, Nevada. The course, as some say, is a leadership course disguised as a tactics course.

Personnel from the 29th Weapons Squadron stationed at Little Rock Air Force Base, traveled to Nellis AFB to participate in and support the 20th anniversary and graduation.

The approach to the class is a fast-paced four-phase course which begins with the basics of the C-130. From there, it moves on to how to deliver and how to operate the C-130 in different theaters with advanced capabilities.

C-130 students, who have already been certified as weapon system experts in the mobility platform are brought to Nellis AFB for a joint exercise. The WIC flies with partners from the Combat Air Forces, bombers from the Global Strike Command, bringing all capabilities and partners together for training in how we would fight in war.

The purpose of the course is to teach pilots and navigators how to deploy a C-130 in any advanced manner and how to bring that instruct on that back to their respective bases. Increasing the combat capabilities of flying squadrons and sharing with them techniques, procedures for air-to-air and air-to-ground combat and the latest tactics. It also helps students gain integration experience and allow them to take their knowledge combined with all other platforms in the Air Force to be able to employ that in a joint fight.

Only the top tier of instructor navigators and instructor pilots are selected to attend the U.S. Air Force Weapons School.

Mobility Air Forces uses the weapons school to ensure pilots and navigators stay current on procedures in order to effectively engage in a joint environment.

“If we treat ourselves as a separate entity, then we won’t be able to integrate and survive the fights that are out there to be had,” said U.S. Air Force Capt. Rick Winfield, 29th Weapons Squadron undergraduate student. “It’s a learning experience that definitely challenges you and pushes you in ways you never expect to be pushed.”

The motto taught for the course is “humble, approachable and credible.” The instructor’s goal is to make students into the best they can be in all three areas.

“They’re really good at making you better, not only in your ability to fly and instruct the C-130, but as an officer,” Winfield said. “I’m looking forward to going back to my unit and taking the lessons that I’ve learned here and try to make people better in the same way that those who came out of this course before me, made me better.”

With the recent graduation of class 16A, the C-130 WIC has graduated 304 Weapons

Officers, transforming the face of tactical employment and joint force integration.

“The future for the course is to continue to groom C-130 pilots,” said U.S. Air Force Capt. Jonathan Dixon, 29th Weapon Squadron phase manager. “There are a lot of new capabilities on the horizon with Block A.1 for the C-130 J model as well as data link incorporation.”

19th AW Command Chief addresses Airmen's concerns

By Airman Kevin Sommer Giron
19th Airlift Wing Public Affairs

Junior enlisted service members gathered for an enlisted All Call organized by U.S. Air Force Chief Master Sgt. Kenneth Carter, 19th Airlift Wing command chief, June 28, 2016, at the Walters Community Support Center on Little Rock Air Force Base, Ark.

The event gave Airmen an opportunity to ask questions and voice their concerns to leadership about a variety of topics.

The first question addressed recent retirement system changes:

Do you have any new information on the blended retirement system?

First, I would like to say that I encourage all Airmen to take the Job Knowledge Online (JKO) leadership training module to learn more. It is a great resource as an initial introduction to the blended retirement system and will help answer questions as we move into implementation.

Key areas of interest are that those serving on or before Dec. 31, 2017, will be grandfathered into the current retirement system of 50 percent of base pay after retiring with 20 years of service, with a 2.5-percent increase for every year after 20. For those serving retirement system or opt into the new Blended Retirement System.

U.S. Air Force Chief Master Sgt. Kenneth Carter, 19th Airlift Wing command chief, speaks with Airmen during a junior enlisted all call June 28, 2016, at the Walters Community Support Center on Little Rock Air Force Base, Ark. on or after Jan. 1, 2018, you will fall under the new Blended Retirement System (BRS) which is 40 percent of base pay at 20 years of service with a 2-percent increase for every year after 20 years. For those who have 12 or less years as of Dec. 31, 2017, you will have an option to elect to stay under the current

The opt-in window will run from Jan. 1, 2018, to Dec. 31, 2018. For those who fall into this category, you will be provided one-on-one counseling through the Airman and Family Readiness Center so that you are armed with education to help make the best choice for you. What you are going to have to look at is where you are in your military career and what your future plans and goals are for completing your service. For those looking to make the Air Force a career and complete 20 years of service, you may want to stay with the current system depending on your TSP investments, other investments and where you are in your career to see if making the transition to the BRS is a better option.

For those who joined for education or other reasons and plan on separating earlier than 20 years, investing now and leaving with some monetary savings may be your best option. You have to determine what's best for you, based on your goals and what you want to achieve financially, personally and professionally. There are more details on how the new Blended Retirement System works in the JKO training with more financial counseling to follow. Please continue to educate yourself, and ask your supervisors questions.

Will there be any budget cuts on basic allowance for housing?

proposals in the 2017 National Defense Authorization Act that would affect the Basic Allowance for Housing entitlement. Nothing has been finalized, but there is discussion on making changes to this entitlement. Say you're a military couple with no dependents. You're both drawing single rate basic allowance for housing. The plan would be to look at both military members as residing at the same residence and draw one BAH allowance.

Similarly, changes are being proposed for military members married to military members with dependents. The proposal also includes military members that room together, because they reside at the same residence, would split the rent payment by getting that amount for their BAH. Nothing has been finalized on these proposed changes, but know that we have a loud voice out there that speaks to Capitol Hill on these types of issues.

Our senior leadership speak for us, as does our Air Force Sergeants Association and other agencies who have our best interests at heart. If you would like to learn more, seek out an AFSA member or attend a meeting, they have more information on what you can do to help keep this entitlement.

How can we learn more about Developmental Special Duty (DSD) processes and opportunities?

You can learn more about developmental special duty opportunities by talking with your leadership about your career goals, specifically supervisors during feedback sessions. Planning for a special duty should begin early in your career, as you look for career broadening opportunities that grow and develop your leadership and communication skills. The vectoring process is key to our developmental special duty cycles which are March and September of every year.

The Air Force looks to fill 10 special duties that include recruiters, military training instructors, career assistance advisors, technical school instructors, professional military instructors and first sergeants to name a few. This need is filtered down to the Major Commands who in turn look at our wings, who receive allocations to fill during these cycle periods. We never know which of the 10 special duties we will be asked to fill, that is simply based on Air Force requirements. To be proactive in our approach to filling these needs, our groups are putting together lists of candidates who meet the criteria for these special duties.

Although this program is not designed to be voluntary, with many times leadership selecting based on an outstanding military record, looking at those who have the skill, experience and talent to fill these positions, we do ask that supervisors at all levels have conversations with people about these opportunities. Using these lists, we will be better prepared to fill these allocations during the DSD cycles, using our best efforts to match the right person at the right time for development.

What you can do is educate yourselves on what special duties are out there. To do this, our first sergeants are putting together seminars which will be advertised base wide soon where people who have served in these special duties come out and speak to those interested. This will enhance your understanding of the special duty as you talk to people who have been there and done that and is information you can use in conversations during feedback sessions with your leadership.

In the end, we see the process of looking at your body of work, educating you on these types of special duty opportunities and having a conversation with you during feedback sessions about your goals as the best way to vector and develop you for one of these special duty opportunities.

19th LRS supplies excellence

U.S. AIR FORCE PHOTOS BY AIRMAN KEVIN SOMMER GIRON

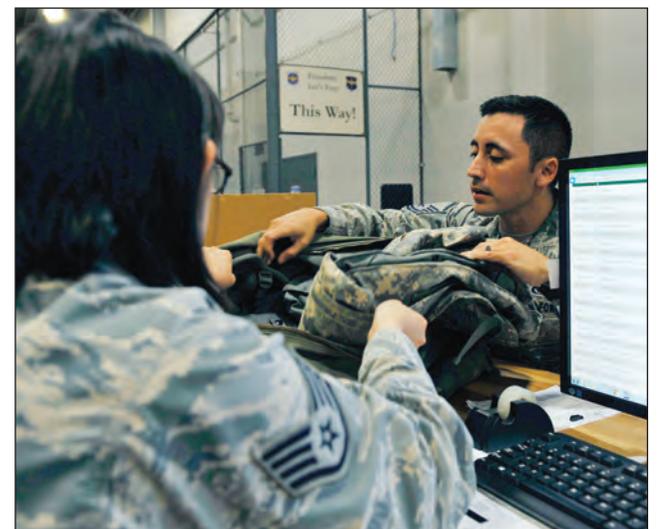

U.S. Air Force Senior Airman Frank Mitchell, 19th Logistics Readiness Squadron central storage journeyman, places assets into a warehouse June 8 at Little Rock Air Force Base. The 19th LRS central storage facility holds approximately 55,000 different aircraft parts worth an estimated $50 million.

U.S. Air Force Airman 1st Class Emily Reed, 19th Logistics Readiness Squadron flight service center journeyman, tags a coupling clamp to maintain accountability of the product June 8 at Little Rock Air Force Base. The squadron has maintained a 98 percent inventory accuracy rate over the past year, surpassing the Air Mobility Command's 97 percent standard.

U.S. Air Force Airman Jessica Hegeman, 19th Logistics Readiness Squadron central storage apprentice, inventories mobile readiness packages June 8 at Little Rock Air Force Base. The central storage facility provides spare aircraft parts, while maintaining one month's worth of supply for each part.

U.S. Air Force Master Sgt. John Torres, 19th Civil Engineer Squadron power production non-commissioned officer in charge, returns his individual protective equipment June 8 at Little Rock Air Force Base. The IPE office equips Airmen with lifesaving chemical gear and individual body armor for contingency deployments.

SCORECARD: 314TH AIRLIFT WING

The 314th Airlift Wing is the nation's C-130 "Center of Excellence." The wing is responsible for training C-130 aircrew members from across the Department of Defense, to include the Coast Guard and 46 allied nations. Some of the ways the 314th AW tracks its successes are through measured aircraft availability and mission-capable rates. Those metrics as of Tuesday are:

Mission capable rate

C-130J: (standard 80 percent): 74.0%

Aircraft availability

C-130J: (standard 8.4): 8.5

C-130 SCHOOL

Number of combat aircrew members sent to the fight beginning

Jan. 11, 2016:

C-130H: 321

C-130J: 190
