WASHINGTON (AFNS) – Secretary of the Air Force Deborah Lee James, have issued a Veterans Day message to Airmen.

Air Force leadership thanks veterans for their service

To the men and women of the United States Air Force:

On this Veterans Day, we honor those great Americans who truly put Service Before Self. In the crucible of conflict, patriotic Americans find that their differences melt away, leaving only their love of country uniting them in selfless service. Because of their willingness to put themselves in harm's way for others, our Nation has remained proud and powerful for generations. From the early days of combat aviation, Airmen have demonstrated the courage and sacrifice that accompany service to America.

When President Woodrow Wilson proclaimed the first Armistice Day in 1919, he urged Americans to be filled "with solemn pride in the heroism of those who died in the country's service and with gratitude for the victory." Later, the holiday was extended to honor veterans of all wars. Even today, the ranks of American veterans continue to grow as Airmen serve alongside fellow Americans in support of operations in Afghanistan, the Middle East and throughout the world.

For some veterans, their service will be a brief, but proud and memorable, period in their personal histories. For others, the effects of their service will extend their sacrifice for a lifetime. Some veterans have suffered visible wounds while others have wounds that remain unseen. Regardless of the nature of their sacrifice, all veterans are worthy of our eternal gratitude, respect and commitment.

This Veterans Day, remember you brother and sister Airmen and Americans who continue to preserve our freedom. We salute you for your service and celebrate the victories you have earned for our Nation.

Signed,

The Honorable Deborah Lee James, Secretary of the Air Force

HISTORY FACT

U.S. AIR FORCE GRAPHIC

On Dec. 10, 1941, Capt. Colin Kelly Jr. assigned to the 14th Bombardment Squadron, 19th Bombardment Group, dropped three 600 pound bombs from a high altitude on what was believed to be a Japanese battleship. After observing a tremendous explosion, the crew assumed that at least one bomb had struck the ship and had likely destroyed it. While returning to Clark Field in the Philippines, the crew came under attack by Japanese Zeros. Kelly stayed at the controls of the badly damaged aircraft while the surviving crew members bailed out. Kelly and his co-pilot, Lt. Donald Robins, attempted to escape. However, the plane exploded and ejected both men. Robins opened his parachute in time. Kelly hit the ground without opening his parachute. In the rush to publicize an American victory in the war’s early days, the details of Kelly’s sacrifice were unintentionally exaggerated. Kelly became the first American popular hero of World War II due to the reports of his supposed actions that day. Kelly received the Distinguished Service Cross for his heroism for the belief that he had damaged or destroyed a battleship and for also sacrificing his life so that his crew could live. Instead of hitting a battleship, Kelly’s crew had actually hit a Japanese cruiser, the Nator.

Little Rock Airmen explore local Native American history

U.S. AIR FORCE STORY AND PHOTOS BY SENIOR AIRMAN STEPHANIE SERRANO, 19TH AIRLIFT WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Every November, Native American History Month is celebrated throughout the country. Members from Little Rock Air Force Base honored the observance with a hike through Petit Jean State Park on Nov. 4 discovering ancient Native American art and experiencing cuisine from its culture.

Gathered at the Walters Community Center, 27 Team Little Rock members brimmed with excitement and wonder before departing.

Stopping at Stout's Point, the group took in the scenic overlook of the Arkansas River and plateaus before moving on. Upon arriving at Petit Jean State Park, two park rangers guided them on a hike to the Rock House Cave, which is not a cave at all, but rocks stacked upon each other.

Once inside the rock shelter, the park rangers pointed out unique examples of early Native American art. Archaeologist believe the ancient artwork is more than 1,000 years old. Although the paintings have faded with time, they are well-preserved and still visible with the use of a flashlight.

Following the cave tour, the group took a quick detour to hike the strenuous two-mile Cedar Falls Trail, one of the most popular hiking trails at the state park. At the end of the trail,

Born in tragedy, built for triumph

U.S. AIR FORCE PHOTOS BY STAFF SGT. REGINA EDWARDS, 19TH AIRLIFT WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

“I’ve come a long way from picking cotton in the fields with my grandfather. I am 89 years old. Looking back at my military career, I wouldn’t change the route that led me to where I’ve been.”

Retired Master Sgt. Leroy Mazell Smith has lived a life few could imagine. One could compare the series of events which sculpted his life to the stanzas of a Delta Blues song.

His birth on an Arkansas bridge during the Great Mississippi Flood of 1927 foreshadowed Smith’s life would be anything but usual for a black man living in the 1920s.

With a memory stronger than some 40 years his junior, Smith recounts countless experiences throughout his life from birth to present times.

“I was born July 14, 1927, on a bridge with thousands of people around,” Smith related. “A midwife was on the bridge and delivered me. I was on that bridge for four days before my birth was documented on record; so I have two birthdays: July 14 and July 18,” he said through laughter.

Son of a logger and farmer, Smith grew up in Pine Bluff. His mother, who cared for him and his two siblings, left school at the age of 13. However, he credits his upbringing to his Baptist grandfather, who he said taught him the value of hard work.

“I didn’t have much of a teenage life,” Smith said. “If I wasn’t working at the funeral home or furniture store, I was picking cotton with my grandfather.”

Smith graduated from high school in Fordyce (Dallas County) at the age of 16. While there, he took preflight aeronautical classes, which changed the course of his future.

“I wanted to be a doctor,” he said, “but the military said they needed black mechanics, so I was inducted into the U.S. Army Air Corps at 16. Looking back now, they did me a favor, I’d say.”

Adapt and overcome

Smith vividly remembers being a scared little black boy from the country in 1943, riding on a bus from Camp Robinson to Sheppard Field, Texas, for basic military training and then later to Chinook, Arkansas, for aircraft and engine training.

“Everything was segregated,” he said. “The ride to training, the barracks we lived in, even the hours we had to shop at the base exchange and eat at the mess hall were separate.

“I remember (white) people asking us, ‘What are you doing here?’ and assuming we blacks were the cooks and bottle washers,” Smith recounted.

This initial introduction into the military while facing segregation did not break his zeal. Smith charged forward meeting every obstacle with faith and optimism. He leaned on his Baptist upbringing and grandfather’s lessons about having strength during the harder days.

“I never retaliated ... even when they would call us monkeys. I just believed those people were ignorant and someday it would be better. My grandfather always said, ‘There’s only one race of people: the human race.’”

Becoming “simply a man”

And while the human race was focused on World War II and which side would prevail, Smith set course for the European theater. He was assigned to the Tuskegee unit; it was here all barriers fell away. He was no longer a black mechanic, just simply an Airman.

“I was scared and proud when I arrived in Italy,” Smith recalled. “I was with an all-black crew that I could identify with. I could actually communicate with the pilots; the officers respected us as the younger members. I didn’t have to just do my job and shut my mouth. We all had a good relationship; it was one of my best memories.”

The Tuskegee Airmen are typically known as an all-black fighter and bomber pilot aircrew who fought in World War II. However, that name, -Tuskegee Airmen- also encompassed navigators, mechanics, instructors, crew chiefs, nurses, cooks and other support personnel for the aircrews.

“I loved being called a Tuskegee Airman,” he said. “I didn’t know that name would be what it is today, but we sure had a lot of unit pride, and there was reason for it.”

The crew was assigned to the 332nd Fighter Group and flew heavy bomber escort missions with P-47 Thunderbolts and later the P-51 Mustangs. To distinguish themselves, they painted the tails of their aircraft red, coining themselves the Red Tails.

“We never lost a bomber,” Smith smiled as he bragged. “Nope, we never lost a plane. It did me proud to say I was a part of this. We were good, and we were finally recognized for it. I’m a low profile guy, but the recognition was nice.”

In 1947, Smith’s tour with the Tuskegee Airmen ended, but the Red Tails’ legend influenced the integration of races in the armed forces. Smith soldiered on as he transitioned from the Army Air Corps to the infant Air Force.

He continued on, also serving in the Korean War and Vietnam Conflict, fulfilling 25 years in the U.S. Air Force and retiring in 1968 as a master sergeant.

Full circle

“It makes me feel very proud to see what the military and the world is like now,” Smith said. “We’re doctors and lawyers now. Hey, look at our president; we’ve come a long way.”

Some would be stopped by the obstacles of racism and discrimination, others would stumble if thrown into unfavorable predicaments and expected to thrive. But throughout his life, like the aircraft and pilots he kept in the sky, Smith never lost his bomber.

His bomber was resilience.

Birthered in him on that bridge — where thousands lost their lives — was the will to persevere through any challenge, circumstance or trial.
